'GODZILLA'

At Strand Theater

Steve Martin, an American reporter, arrives in Tokyo on one assignment, and finds himself thrown into a more important one. Ships disappear from the ocean after a blinding flash of light. That's what starts the film now at the Strand Theater off in high! The survivors die, so can tell no tales. Steve goes to live on an island with the natives to get the story. Godzilla, the monster, shows up for a brief space. He's as tall as a three story building. No baby, his monster! Nor can it be killed, it seems. If it isn't a ship it's a city he destroys as quick as a flash.

That's the situation of this newest monster - fiction - story for fans of this sort of thing. The exploits and situations make the story, so telling you about them would spoil your fun.

Underwater photography, jets sweeping from the skies, trains ripped from rails, scenes which are unforgettable so cleverly are they conceived, are all here.

The cofeature is "Steel Jungle."

The Strand Theater is featuring outside of the theater a time-schedule which is a very smart idea and saves the ticket-seller answering a hundred such questions daily. — M. O. S.
